

Sandy the Starfish meets Doctor Dolphin.

A pre-schoolers book about an outpatient's visit to hospital including having a blood test and visiting the pharmacy.

Are you frightened by needles?

How do you think a child would react?

Between the ages 0-5 children receive 5 standard injections. Many children are scared and confused by these and require a simple and understandable explanation.

Some children require regular injections, how can you explain hospital visits to them in a familiar and friendly way?

Sandy Starfish can help.

Sandy Starfish is a unique, fun and friendly lift the flap book for children and parents to help with hospital visits. There is currently no other book on the market that covers such a delicate subject in such an assessable way.

The book helps with fear of injections by:

- Encouraging interaction between child and parent
- Reassurance through talking
- Alleviation of fear by understanding the unknown
- Reducing the stress and guilt of the parent
- Making it fun

Sandy Starfish is aimed at boys and girls from 0-5 years old. It is also aimed at relatives and friends of these children, to encourage easy conversation about the difficult subject of hospital visits.

The book is supplemented by a fun and interactive website which includes colouring-in pages and a game.

The website can be found at www.sandystarfish.net

"It's very nicely produced – lift-the flap can be tricky to do and this is very good. The content is well-focused – a result, I'm sure of you having first-hand experience of this situation. The book is very gentle and thoughtful, which is exactly right in this context – but with the right amount of fun and intrigue to keep the child turning the pages."

"Helps take the fear away for parent and child – another piece in the armoury for telling children what to expect and not to be frightened."
